ABSTRACT

Freedom of expression does not exist in isolation, but rather in constant dialogue with other fundamental rights. Its interconnection with human dignity, privacy, equality and access to information demonstrates the complexity of this web of rights that underlies a democratic and fair society. The challenge is to balance these rights, promoting an environment in which freedom of expression effectively contributes to the common good. In this sense, this work proposes to analyze and verify alternative ways of implementing the right to freedom of expression, in particular, how the actions of the notary can contribute to the realization and access to this right.
